

Junior League World Series umpire break record for years of experience

Fifteen umpires make up the Junior League World Series Class of 2010. Director of Umpires George Glick said combined the umps set a JLWS record with 378 years of experience. They worked 285 different assignments at state/division, regional and world series and have called balls and strikes at more than 25,000 games. And all umpires working the series are unpaid volunteers.
